PREAMBLE

The International Union of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology

The International Union of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology (IUBMB) unites most of the world's biochemists and molecular biologists through their academies of science, research councils or biochemical societies. These are dues-paying, voting Adhering Bodies and non-dues-paying, non-voting Associate Adhering Bodies, as defined in these Statutes and By-Laws.

The Executive Committee of IUBMB meets once a year and consists of five officers and three members who have responsibility for Congresses and Focused Meetings, Education and Training, and Publications. The General Assembly meets every three years in conjunction with an International Congress and consists of the delegates and associate delegates. The responsibilities and rules of procedure are codified in the Statutes and By-Laws.

Dedicated to promoting international cooperation in biochemistry and molecular biology via research, discussion, publication, and standardization, and committed to promoting high standards in biochemistry and molecular biology throughout the world (Statute 1.2), the IUBMB fulfils these mandates in a variety of ways. Committees charged with sponsoring symposia, educational activities and discussion of frontier research topics, regularly sponsor meetings in all parts of the world, and, in the case of the symposia/educational programs, with special emphasis on helping biochemists and molecular biologists in developing countries. The Nomenclature Committee, working together with the Joint (IUBMB-International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry) Committee on Biochemical Nomenclature, recommends standard terminology for biochemical compounds and uniform units in biochemistry and molecular biology, and, in some cases, classification. This committee's home page address is <http://www.sbcs.qmul.ac.uk/iubmb/nomenclature/> with links to many of the internationally agreed recommended nomenclatures of use to biochemists and molecular biologists.

Every three years the IUBMB sponsors an International Congress of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology. These Congresses are major international meetings where current research in all fields of biochemistry and molecular biology is considered. Thousands of individual research projects are presented as poster displays and leading researchers survey their fields in symposia and plenary lectures. The Congress location moves from continent to continent, allowing the attendees to appreciate the local impact of biochemistry and molecular biology in the host country and the universality of the discipline. Travel Fellowships are provided to young scientists to attend each Congress and a pre-Congress Symposium is organized especially for them. From 1992-2016 the IUBMB sponsored IUBMB Conferences in the years between IUBMB Congresses, which considered a particular aspect of biochemistry and molecular biology. These Conferences were replaced in 2017 by smaller Focused Meetings, of which up to three are sponsored each year.

The IUBMB works closely with the four regional organizations that unite the biochemical societies of Asia and Oceania (Federation of Asian and Oceanian Biochemists and Molecular Biologists - FAOBMB), Europe (Federation of European Biochemical Societies - FEBS), Africa (Federation of African Societies of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - FASBMB), and the Americas (PanAmerican Association for Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - PABMB). All are linked formally with the IUBMB as Associated Organizations and receive substantial financial support for their scientific activities from the Union. The International Federation of Clinical Chemistry and Laboratory Medicine, the International Society for Neurochemistry, the International Society for Free Radical Research and the International Society of Vitamins and Related Biofactors are also Associated Organizations of IUBMB.

The Union also fosters growth in other ways. The IUBMB Jubilee Lectures, established to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the First International Congress of Biochemistry held in Cambridge UK in 1949, are intended as Plenary Lectures that significantly enhance the quality of a scientific meeting, symposium, or annual national meeting of the smaller Adhering or Associate Adhering Bodies. Wood-Whelan Research Fellowships provide short-term fellowships for younger biochemists and molecular biologists to travel to other laboratories to undertake research that cannot be done in their own laboratories. The IUBMB Distinguished Service Award gives special recognition to biochemists and molecular biologists who have made a major contribution to the activities of the Union.

Reaching individual biochemists and molecular biologists is also the purpose of the IUBMB publications. Trends in Biochemical Sciences (TiBS) is seen monthly by 100,000 readers, keeping them informed on research progress across the broad field of biochemistry and molecular biology as well as of meetings, people and events. Biotechnology and Applied Biochemistry publishes original research findings and reviews in the expanding field of the practical application of the subject. IUBMB Life is the Union's monthly journal for rapid publication of short original research articles, critical reviews and hypothesis papers on a broad subject base that includes biochemistry, molecular biology, cell biology and molecular medicine. Biochemistry and Molecular Biology Education is dedicated to publishing articles, reviews and laboratory experiments to assist the teaching of biochemistry and molecular biology, microbiology and cell biology to science and medical students throughout the world. BioFactors publishes reviews and original communications on bioactive substances in living organisms. The Union also sponsors BioEssays and, as well, Molecular Aspects of Medicine, a review journal that links various aspects of medicine to biochemistry, molecular and cell biology, physiology, pharmacology and pathology. Enzyme Nomenclature and other nomenclature documents provide the universally used language through which biochemists and molecular biologists communicate their research results. Metabolic Pathways Maps and Inborn Errors of Metabolism Charts are useful for students as complements to textbooks. The Education Committee's reports on Standards for the Ph.D. Degree in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology (1989) and Standards for the Ph.D. Degree in the Molecular Biosciences (2000) have been well received around the world.

Biochemical and molecular biological research findings and new methodologies based on biochemical and molecular biological principles constitute the basis for the explosion in knowledge and the resulting practical applications that make this the most rapidly advancing area in biological progress that the world has known. The IUBMB has a leadership role in helping communicate this new knowledge, with its impact on our understanding of genetics and the development of living organisms and the translation of those findings into practical advances in medicine, agriculture, industry and the search for alternative energy sources. The rapid growth in membership in the IUBMB in the past three decades bears testimony to this both in the academy and society members and through a class of members that consists of organizations (Special Members) that depend on biochemical research for the products they manufacture.

The Union's income is derived from its members, from royalties on publications, from granting bodies such as ICSU and UNESCO, and from donations. It is used to pay for sponsored scientific and educational meetings to support the regional organizations in their scientific activities, to help younger biochemists and molecular biologists from developing countries to attend IUBMB Congresses and to undertake research in foreign laboratories, and to maintain communication within the IUBMB family. Administrative costs are kept low by using the voluntary services of some 400 biochemists and molecular biologists in all the member countries who serve as committee members, representatives, and members of editorial boards.

More complete information is to be found on the IUBMB home page <http://www.iubmb.org> which is constantly updated. This website also provides links to most members of the IUBMB family.

The Mission of the IUBMB

The Mission of the IUBMB is to foster and support the growth and advancement of biochemistry and molecular biology as the foundation from which the biomolecular sciences derive their basic ideas and techniques in the service of mankind. This it does throughout the world with particular concern for areas where biochemistry is less well developed, by promoting international cooperation and high standards in research, discussion, application and publication, and through international standardization of methods, nomenclature and symbols, in biochemistry and molecular biology. The IUBMB promotes the norms, values, standards and ethics of science and the free and unhampered movement of scientists of all nations interested in participation in activities related to biochemistry and molecular biology.

This the IUBMB will accomplish by:

1. Serving as a scientific, international, nongovernmental body in objectively addressing global issues that involve the sciences of biochemistry and molecular biology. Where appropriate, the IUBMB will represent these interests in governmental and nongovernmental forums.
2. Contributing to the advancement of research in biochemistry and molecular biology throughout the world.
3. Promoting the service of biochemistry and molecular biology to society.
4. Facilitating the development of effective channels of communication in the international community of biochemists and molecular biologists.
5. Assisting the biotechnology industry in its contributions to sustainable development, wealth creation and improvement of the quality of life.
6. Utilizing its global perspective to contribute toward the enhancement of education in biochemistry and molecular biology and to advance the public understanding of these disciplines and the scientific method.

7. Making special efforts to encourage the career development of young biochemists and molecular biologists.
8. Broadening the geographical base of the Union and ensuring that its human capital is drawn from all segments of the world community of biochemists and molecular biologists.
9. Encouraging worldwide dissemination of information about the activities of the Union.
10. Assuring sound management of its resources to provide maximum value for the funds invested in the Union.
